The City of London is one of the most walkable parts of London and has hundreds of dedicated pedestrian ways.

We hope this map encourages you to explore, enjoy and travel the City, uncovering hidden gems and scenic routes.

How to use
The map has been designed to show those in the City (workers, visitors and residents) the most pedestrian-friendly places, where you can discover green and tranquil areas.

The pedestrian pathways and zones, high walkways and quiet streets are highlighted in different colours and can be used to travel anywhere within the square mile by foot.

The walking time scale bar depicts 5 minutes walking time and can be used to estimate the length of your journey on foot – often using the pedestrian-friendly routes can be quicker.

The key areas highlighted include:
The Barbican, The Eastern Cluster and the Thames Path north bank route.

So whether you need to get to or from work, go out for lunch or visit one of the City's attractions, the City of London Walking map can show you the best walking route.

Most stepped and lift access to and from high-level walkways have been identified on the map. However not all pathways and pedestrian zones with steps have been identified.

Types of pedestrian footway in the City

Pathways and pedestrian zones:
Are found all across the square mile in various forms from secret alleyways to squares.

High-level walkways:
Can be found mainly at the Barbican and Lower Thames Street. The Barbican is a residential area so please be mindful of this when using the walkways.

Quiet streets:
Are often side streets with relatively few motor vehicles.
